

Each page has 20 links to images, where you can only progress one page at a time in either direction. Add to that the black page colour and absence of the usual flashiness common in such sites, browsing this site is an almost eerie experience.

This is one of those deceptively plain sites...

So, navigation and ambience are not the strong points of the site (even though there is a search box that allows searching the site on Artist name). But, this understated Web site offers about 15,000 links to user submitted art works. The best way to randomly view a page is to directly modify the URL. For example the URL for page no 2 is [http://artworks.avalonweb.net/gallery/gallery_main.php?pagenum=2&]. Making suitable changes in the URL it is possible to visit page 100, 700, etc. It needs to be mentioned that most of the links that appear in the later pages are dead. So an accurate figure of the number of active links on the site is anyone's guess.