

Go to the settings menu, and mount the CD Drive, USB drives and enable audio. This ensures that the Linux you will run is not a stripped down version and has access to many areas of the machine.

The next step, is to put the DVD/CD disk in the drive, and let the machine boot up. Fortunately, there is no BIOS setup involved, and any operating system is detected by default.