to sleep.

8.2.2.10 Friends and Networking

Now we come to the best part of the software. You can share stickies with colleagues and friends. All you need to know is the IP addresses of your colleagues' computers, and you're good to go.

First, right-click on the icon in the taskbar, select Options and then go to the Network tab. Here you will find an option called Enable networking, make sure you tick this, and then choose the other settings as you see fit.

You now have to right-click the taskbar icon again and select Friends. Here you will see a window where you need to add Friends and Groups. For example, you could add all colleagues to a Work group, so remember to create your groups before you add friends.

When you add a friend, you have to provide a name, an IP address (the box just says address, so don't put a postal address here) and an email ID. Add those in and you're good to go. After you have added one friend, you can copy all of his/her contacts, so that you don't have to sit around adding each and every person on every computer you want Stickies installed on. This is a great way to share ToDo lists and set reminders for colleagues, and even have some fun. There's a whole lot more to Stickies than we have space to talk about, but thankfully nothing is really hidden away from sight. Now that you're used to using it, have some fun uncovering even more features than we have mentioned here.