When filling your profile, make sure you don't let anonymous people have access to your personal information

these social networking sites. Is the policy easy to read and understand? Will they share or sell your information? How recently was it updated? Sites like LinkedIn state plainly that will never sell your info. Facebook and Myspace do not state they won't sell your info so it's safe to assume they're reserving the right to do so.

By default, everyone can find your profile listing in a public search. This includes Facebook and Myspace, along with the potential to find people across MSN, Google and Yahoo. Make sure you go through the Privacy Settings of your account to ascertain which information you'd like to display publicly. Alternatively, you can set your profile to "No Networks" in Facebook which will
