

The phone isn't without its flaws, a lack of camera can be a deal breaker for a lot of people, but we would really love to own a capable phone (in terms of feature), which doesn't have a camera. Also as of now it isn't really suitable for main stream use and is in the "hacker's dream toy" stage given its open specification. Though running the Om 2008 distribution on it (which uses the Qtopia phone stack), gives it a fairly usable and stable interface. The bottomline remains, if in the yesteryears you were the first guy in your block to learn HTML and think GUI is for chimps and CLI is for ninjas, you better save every penny you own and get this one in your hands. d

Don't be surprised, this IS a phone screen only, running full fledged Debian OS
