

Netbooks

I've been wondering; I need a computing device - something that's small, light and that's just enough for me to access the internet and maybe watch a few movies and listen to some cool music in my free time. And no, I can't always use my mobile to do that. I move around a lot and I can't think of lugging my huge Alienware gaming laptop around the place.

Many might think netbooks are just over hyped cheaper laptops. I look at it a little differently. Netbooks were made keeping power consumption and battery capacities in mind. One of the things manufacturers did was put Intel's low power Atom processor, which brought good battery life to netbooks within the Rs. 25,000 mark. Such battery life would normally be
