

2. Identifying your customers

Now that you've been able to gauge your own skills, it's time to look at how those skills can be translated into money. The first step to doing that is obviously to identify who your clients are. At the risk of sounding idiotic, any business, no matter how small or how large, is a potential client. The smaller and medium businesses are the ones that you will be focusing on, and we're going to try and illustrate through examples how you can help any business in some way or the other.