

3. Choosing a platform based on needs

The first step to providing web hosting is to find out your customer's needs and then choose a platform. It is very important to choose the right one. For this you have to take into consideration the costs incurred, feedback from users about the performance, time taken to install, as well as maintenance and updation overheads. Whatever you choose, it's essential to note that technology keeps changing and with this your customer's needs and requirements will also change.
