

step would be to buy a domain. By using reseller accounts, you get better rates as well. Although this may not result in a significant profit by itself, you can be assured of a better offering for your customers, as your rates will be lower than your competition. Finally, when you get a domain that hopefully works towards sparking an interest in your prospective customer, the next obvious purchase your client needs is hosting. This, is profit for you. Because you will not be paying any money whatsoever. It will take you some time to make up the fee you paid your service provider. But once you have cut even and have recovered that money, each client you get contributes towards your profit!

Doesn't that feel much better? Type hosting in a web search and the result are quite interesting. You hear from names in your city that you never thought had the infrastructure to provide web hosting services. 99 per cent uptime guaranteed! Linux hosting, web hosting, etc. Do you really think they have leased lines, dedicated servers? Absolutely not. We've seen some ridiculous ads, and let's not talk about it here.

As several web masters will point out, one of the key costs in maintaining their web site is the hosting account. Also, prices vary from one service provider to another. Some charge for their investments, others inflate prices for greedy profits

As several web masters will point out, one of the key costs in maintaining their web site is the hosting account. Prices vary from seller to seller. Products and plans are pushed in the name of better security, more efficient infrastructure, etc. In fact, most of these are hosted on shared servers. That is to say, at any given point in time, depending on the size of your files on your host server, there are other web sites also that share your content. This way, the web hosting company doesn't have to procure and install dedicated hardware. The benefit is lower hardware and operational costs, and as a result, lower hosting fees. Potential site owners and web masters are aware of this fact. This forms the bulk of your potential client base. You need to be aware of this and price your services accordingly. You need to be competitive in your pricing and offers. Also, you need to have a one-stop shop for web servicing needs so that you are a preferred destination for anyone thinking of starting a web business.

Web masters also don't mind the fact that their web site will share space on a host with other web site, as long as they are charged much lower prices. The fact is they are not hosting mission critical operations such as launching the Chandrayaan into space. "Some" amount of downtime is acceptable, but not at the cost of affecting operations. Despite all its superior architecture and technological advancements, networks
