

quote. This is also accompanied by a live chat window. Templates may come with this as well if not it is not very difficult to set up. The live chat feature offers a sense of trust and if possible you should have it as well. A good way would be to have potential clients connect with you on the Jabber network. This way they can add you even on Gtalk, which used the jabber network.

6.2 Set up a web site that explains who you are Resellers certainly exist a dime a dozen. Hence putting across your value proposition to your client is of the utmost importance. So far we have learnt how to tweak the default template offered by the hosting service provider to stand out. Yet being just a domain name / space reseller is not going to cut it. You need to provide a more comprehensive offering complete with web designing, web development, search engine optimisation, logo design and maybe even e-commerce solutions. If you're intending to offer only space and domain services then you need to undercut others on price purely. Your prices and other services should be prominently displayed on your website. You can use web2.0 styling elements such as chunky blocks, big numbers and tag clouds to represent your offering.

You're website needs to mainly be suited to capture the attention of two distinct type of clients. One is first time webmasters, setting up their first site and even established webmasters who are aware of hosting solutions and things such as control panels etc. The latter kind will be
