

community and even to the dentist. Your task would be identifying such needs. Once you get a few jobs to create websites or simply host a website or register a domain name, you can build further references. Some business owners may not need full web development and may only need email solutions. They may want a name@businessname.com type of email address for themselves. In which case this is a service you can provide. You can have a monetary as well as reference arrangement with your clients. For instance, if the client can refer 10 other customers to you, he will get a discount of 20 per cent. This way you get access to more customers and an opportunity for more jobs.

Now that you know how to get references, the next step is to display the references prominently on your website.

6.3.1 Using a portfolio

A portfolio is where you can display some of your previous work prominently. If you have some web development skill and have made websites for some of your clients, you can show small thumbnails of those websites with links to the actual websites. This acts as a client list and inculcates a sense of trust in the minds of potential clients. Anyone who comes on to your website feels that you have done a lot of prior work and therefore is more willing to pay you additional money for getting their own job done. If some of your sites have won awards, you can put that up as well. If you are a SEO expert then you can give the page rank of some of the websites for which you have done SEO.

Typical client testimonials