

6.9.3 Set up basic streaming preferences

After you turn on media streaming, Windows Media Player will automatically detect any computers and devices on your network that can receive media streams. You can either stream media to all computers and devices on your network, or allow access to your media on a case-by-case basis. To choose which devices will receive your media streams, follow these steps:

Media Sharing options to configure whom to share your media with

After you have turned on media streaming, you get a few more options.