

Lantern and CHDK (for Canon) and others, are gaining popularity. But this again involves all the risks that are stated above, in a more grave capacity, if anything. Cameras are not the most easily programmable of devices, and any steps you take with regards to firmware tweaking should be done with extreme caution, because the lack of support for this kind of hacking means that you could end up with a worthless piece of mess, and have no place to go with it. That being said Canon Cameras are less risky when it comes to hacking.
