

Introduction

Don't you just hate it when someone tells you what you can and can't do?

When you buy a device – whether a smartphone, tablet or even a camera – you buy it to use it to the fullest; to squeeze out every little feature and last drop of performance from it. But not only do you buy a device, in most cases you end up buying into an ideology and culture too. The manufacturer gives you access to its ecosystem and at the same time levies certain restrictions on what you can and can't do with their device. These restrictions are more part of this ideology, than realistic reasons to limit access. Reasons cited can include security – “it's for your own good; third party apps will give your