

Purchasing software titles is quite simple. When you purchase something, you need to authenticate yourself, and if you haven't done so already, you need to add a credit card or debit card to your account. You do need a card to make a payment, for now there seems to be no other way to make purchases on the Windows Store.

We did find that the store accepted our debit cards, and even worked with the Verified by Visa / MasterCard SecureCode systems that sometimes cause issues while making international purchases.

Applications can also support in-app purchases for content, additional functionality or even subscriptions. Some apps can offer a free version, with the ability to unlock additional features for a payment. These payment systems can use the Microsoft Store payment method, or their own system.
