

Google Currents

Google Currents has a couple of differences when compared to Flipboard — like when adding sources, Currents has a good range of Indian publications by default. Currents organises items as Cards, much like its Google Now interface, making you glide through information. If you're just not a fan of the flipping gesture in Flipboard, you'll be pleased to use the right-to-left gesture on Currents to go to the next page, much like most eBook reader apps. In Android, Currents also supports the background syncing of your subscriptions for offline reading.

Price: Free

Link: <http://digit.in/FTCurrents>

Feedly

Who doesn't like to get thier latest dose of news all the time? All Digit readers, especially, are news junkies. Feedly is an app that integrates with your Google Reader RSS account and presents content in a relevant fashion on a mobile device. Even if you don't use Google Reader, simply typing any website in the search field that has an RSS feed setup will do. You can keep track of your favorite sites, Tumblr blogs and even YouTube channels. Again, like all social readers, it brings about consistency to the experience of reading and has a spiffy, touch-friendly interface.

Price: Free

Link: <http://digit.in/FTFeedly>