

WhatsApp

WhatsApp took the good things (like always-on, group chats etc.) from BBM (BlackBerry Messenger), and made them available for every platform (including BlackBerry). It automatically adds contacts that use WhatsApp to your favorites — if they're in your phonebook and using WhatsApp, you can start messaging them right away. WhatsApp has the widest audience any mobile instant messenger has seen. It's a name that's become synonymous with instant messaging. Along with text, you can share videos, photos, audio clips, locations and contacts with other WhatsApps.

Hike

Hike is much like WhatsApp in functionality, but here are a couple of reasons why we think it deserves to be on this list. Firstly, it's an elegantly designed cross-platform app. It has a cool feature called "Nudge" that gets the attention of the receiver by simply tapping on the screen. Next, you get to send 100 free text messages per month. At the moment, they're also giving away ₹10 talk-time for signing up and ₹20 talk-time for every person you've successfully invited to use Hike. You can message friends who're on Hike and also those who aren't. Lastly, you'll be proud to know that this app was developed in our country.
