

Skype

Irrespective of which device you and the receiver are on, you can still have a video conversation using Skype. It not only works on major smartphone platforms, but has apps for Windows and Mac too. The app has another reason for settling into your app drawer — if you have relatives living abroad (who doesn't?!), you can buy Skype credit and call them on their telephones via the internet for a fraction of the cost of an ISD call. For example, calling to the US on Skype today roughly costs one-sixth the cost it would via a mobile phone (~₹1 per minute).

Price: Free

Link: <http://dgit.in/FTSkype>

Avocado

Avocado is a two-person app that allows you and your better half to have a dedicated space to communicate. More than just being a private little instant messenger, Avocado also allows the creation of lists and calendar entries. You can share images in a common album, click photos of yourself on your phone and assign them as emoticons. If that wasn't enough, you can "hug" the phone to send a virtual hug to your beau, or even apply a virtual kiss to his or her photo. Last, but not least, you can also access all the content on Avocado via any web browser.

Price: Free

Link: <http://dgit.in/FTAvocado>