

TuneWiki

Googling the lyrics to a song every single time is an unwanted chore. TuneWiki is a multi-platform app that gladly does all the dirty work for you. The moment you play a song on your device, it uses the internet to pull out lyrics of that particular song instantly. For many of the songs, it also automatically highlights the line being sung so you don't have to scroll to find it. Other nifty features include on-the-fly translation of songs in 40 different languages. There's a song identification tool as well — powered by Gracenote.

Unlike competing apps such as Shazam or SoundHound, this service can be used unlimited number of times. We tried many English and Hindi songs and it got them all spot on!

IMDB

A must-have app if you're into movies and TV shows. Its wonderful database archives every person involved in their making. It has a strong user-generated ratings system that helps you judge what to watch before you watch it. Also there to help you make a decision is information such as plot summary, synopsis, critic and user reviews, photographs, trivia and news. You can also create your 'watchlist' to keep a track of the shows and movies that you want to see.
