

Google Calendar

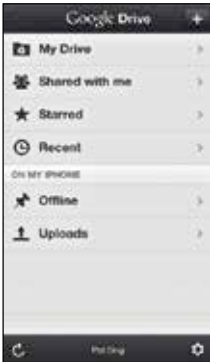

Now if there's one app that you need the most on your phone to stay on track and get organized, it's the calendar app. If you ask us, Google Calendar should be that default calendar on your phone. For starters, it's free, simple to use and easy to share. The Google Calendar lets you mark dates, reminders and share your monthly plans with people in your circle. Tired of paying late fee for your mobile phone bills? Worry not, because a reminder via Google Calendar will ensure you pay your bills on time. It's a great tool at work for scheduling meetings and working on collaborative assignments. Get the Google Calendar on your phone to never miss out on things that are important to you.

Price: Free

Link: <http://dgit.in/UrSQUy>

Google Drive

Although the name's misleading, Google Drive isn't just your typical cloud storage app. The search giant's popular cloud productivity suite, Google Docs, is now covered under the Drive branding. The app allows you to create and edit documents and spreadsheets that you can collaborate with other Drive users. It comes with basic formatting options that you'll find on a typical word processor, and spreadsheets that allows multiple sheets, row/column manipulation and formulas. It's not a full-fledged Office suite, but if you want to do basic office productivity live with other people, then it should suffice.

Price: Free

Link: <http://dgit.in/X1d4VO>