

Here is what we are looking at, at this moment (with the names being revealed, and retracted on mouse-events)

the corner, gloomy because we've been ignoring it for so long. Don't worry, 'finisher', we're getting to you. What we're trying to do here is simply get the user to understand that we're pulling the same data which is reflected in the `about:memory` page.

```

• <code>
•
• var footer = d3.select("#finisher")
// Link to 'about:memory' as the source of data
• .append("a")
• .attr("href","about:memory")
• .attr("target","_blank")
• .style("font-size","15px")
• .style("font-style","italic")
• .text("Where do you get your data from?");
•
• </code>

```

And done! That was quite something, wasn't it? 