

share with should be in your contacts. Let's say that now you want to share a photo with them. Go to Photos, open that picture and tap on Share, which is represented by an arrow coming out of a box. Then select AirDrop from amongst the other means of sharing. You can turn on AirDrop by going to the Control Center (swipe up on any Home screen), or you'll be prompted to do so when you select to share via AirDrop. It will then show you a list of contacts nearby with AirDrop set up. Select the image and tap the icon for that friend. The intended recipient can Accept or Decline the request. When accepted, the photo will be added to their Photos library.

AirDrop is only available for iPhone 5 & up, iPod Touch 5G, iPad mini, and iPad 4.

4. Improved Siri

Apple's voice assistant can do a lot more now than just answer your silly questions with a vague reply. Amongst other stuff like pulling up info from Wikipedia, Twitter and controlling system settings, you can now change Siri's gender. To do that go to Settings > General > Siri where you

Siri has more aspects to her now.