

Teaching Siri a thing or two

tures with your friends by setting up a shared stream. Tap on the Share button, and then the plus sign. Add the contacts you want to share your memories with. All your friends can then post comments, photos and videos to the shared stream and it will appear on all of your's devices.

6. Spotlight

iOS's universal search, Spotlight has a new location now. To search your iDevice, slide down from anywhere on the Home screen (except from the very top because that will show the notification centre). In earlier versions, Spotlight had it's own screen to the left of the Home screen.

It searches a your iPhone/iPad for applications, contacts, videos, mails, messages and even podcasts – pretty much everything. You can see or change the list of items that it searches by going to Settings > General > Spotlight Search. Searching almost anything on your device is a productivity booster, but it also uses a lot of processing power. The more data it has to search from, the more indexing it does. So if there are some options that you'd not search via Spotlight, uncheck the items you don't need indexed.
