

Google (or whatever is your default search engine).

When you click on the Share icon, you get the option to share your web page via iMessage, Mail and your social accounts. From there, you can also Bookmark the page and Add to Reading List. And there is a new feature: 'Shared Links'. This pulls URLs from your Twitter timeline, and shows you what people have to say about them.

The option for Private browsing is now right there on the bottom left corner, saving us a trip to Settings app to toggle. The Reading List, as the name suggests, shows you pages which you've saved to the reading list.

You can now open up to 24 tabs at a time. To access or switch between them, tap the square icon in the bottom right corner of your screen. You'll see a 3D "rolodex" view of the web pages; scroll up or down to see all the pages. You can reorder tabs by long pressing and moving to the desired position. To close any tab, tap on the cross on that page. To open any tab while surfing the web, long press on the link and select Open in the New Page option.

Swiping backward or forwards takes you to previous and next pages in the browsing session. You can also change the search engine in Safari by going to Settings > Safari > Search Engine and choosing between Google, Yahoo and Bing.

The rolodex view for open tabs

14. Compass: Spirit level

Next time you decide to take carpentry in your hand, your iPhone will come in handy. It now has a hidden spirit level in the Compass app. To use it, open the Compass app, and swipe from right to left to access the second screen. Place your iPhone on the shelf, and if the inclination is correct, the screen will turn

Measure inclinations