more display area. With the help of the ambient light sensor built in your iDevice, it will automatically switch on the night-mode after sunset or in dimly lit areas. This displays the map with a darker background in place of the traditional bright white, which is easy on the eyes and thus easier to read.

Another new addition to Maps is that you can choose a default mode of travel. Go to Settings > Maps and select Walking or Driving under Preferred Directions.

29. Mail

iOS 7 is more gesture-driven than its predecessors. Swipe backwards, i.e. from left to right, to move back one screen in apps such as Mail, Settings, Messages or Safari. This makes sense as there aren't any 'back' buttons in Apple.

Along with the support for gestures, the Mail app has been updated to incorporate a much required feature. The build up of notifications becomes an eyesore, and it was time they sorted it out. All emails in your Apple Mail can now be flagged, or marked as read/unread in a couple of simple steps. First, click on the Edit on the top right corner, and tap the Mark All button
