

that appears on the bottom left corner of the screen. A pop-up will then appear and you can choose to Flag/Unflag or Mark as Unread/Read your emails.

30. Sounds

A regular update to the Sounds' library is being made. Honestly, we all got bored with the classical ringtones and everyone using the same one. A host of new ringtones, alarms and alerts have been added. And Apple claims that they're so good, that you'll miss calls and wouldn't want to turn off alarms because "you're busy dancing". Why don't you try these out and tell us if they're any good? Nettled family members or next door neighbours will add credibility to your story.

Email management just got easier

31. AutoFill

Safari's AutoFill feature fills out your web forms for you using your Contact info and previous names and passwords. In iOS 7, it has been extended to remember account numbers and credit card details. Safari will automatically enter your details when you need to sign in or shop online. If you trust it, you can turn off these AutoFill options by going to Settings > Safari > Passwords & AutoFill.

32. All Apps: One Folder

Previous versions of iOS only allowed 16 apps in a folder. iOS 7, however, does not limit the number of apps that you can file away in a folder. No more Games1, Games2 cluttered about on your Home screen and the need to remember where you put a specific app. iOS 7 organizes your apps in groups of 9, and you can swipe to move to the next page. Now you can truly organize your Home screen.

In earlier versions of iOS, you couldn't put Newsstand in a folder. This
