

these brings up their respective features and screens.

Favourites: You can select individual contacts and assign them the favourite status so you have a short cut list for those frequently called persons' in your life. This feature is also helpful when you start using the Do Not Disturb mode and you can quickly block access from all contacts except the ones in your favourite list.

Recent: As we covered earlier, this section presents the list of your most recently made, received or missed calls. Interestingly enough the number of recent calls that are displayed is 77. Touching any of these calls immediately begins dialling them. The list of calls also tells you the contact's name (if it's a saved contact) or else their contact number. Missed calls appear in red and those calls made by you have a tiny icon of a phone receiver to the left of the contact. To the right of each name or number is the time of the call and an information icon (small case letter i in a circle) that when touched gives you all the details of that call.

Contacts: This section of the app is your quick access phonebook. Sorted in alphabetical order it lists all your contact in one place. You can either use the search bar at the top of the screen to look for a contact or sift through the alphabet index that is to the right vertical edge of the screen. We recommend the search. Conveniently your own number is listed at the top of the contacts list under "My Number". Nifty. Adding a new contact is simple. Just touch the plus sign at the top right and fill in all the usual details along with your custom choice of ringtone, text tone and custom vibration alerts. You can even make your own vibrations to go along with different contacts. You can also change your contacts list by source. On the top left of the screen here

A whole lot of work calls happening