

Calendar

The calendar app in the iOS 7 is an excellent tool for organizing and scheduling your activities and events. At its macro view it presents you with yearly calendars with the current year locked in. You can slide to earlier and later years with a flick of your finger. The bottom of the screen always presents the same three options: Today, Calendars and Inbox. Touching Today centres the screen view to the current period with the current date circled and highlighted. Touching Calendars takes you to the customisation screen where you can choose which online account (Gmail, Facebook, Others) you want to view.

You can individually select between them or choose to see them all or hide them all. It also allows you to specifically filter out birthdays that have been saved. For those of you with multiple online accounts synced to your phone it becomes an easy way to separate your personal activities from your professional ones. The Edit option to the top left allows you to delete any accounts or details from your calendars selection. Touching Done takes you back to your yearly calendar view. The Inbox option creates a catalogue of any invitations that you've accept and scheduled in your calendar for easy viewing in one place. The top right of the main calendar screen presents two options: Search (magnifying glass icon) and Add Event (plus sign). If you're looking for a specific event and don't know what date it was then search is your best bet. The Add Event option takes you to a detailed form where you can set up the event details which include precise timings, alarm reminders, other attendants to the event and your personal status (Busy/Free).

A very busy schedule indeed
