

8. Vimeo

The alternative video streaming service released an iOS 7 optimised version which boasts of tight integration with the OS – you can now upload videos directly from your iPhone or iPad's Camera app. The new version also offers easier navigation where videos start playing as you're navigating through the thumbnails. If you're on a spotty internet connection or gearing up for a long trip, Vimeo also lets you cache and watch videos offline. While the new design of the app is breath-taking, it does have one crucial flaw – the latest update seems to have removed the search functionality. If that's a deal breaker you should probably hold off from updating, but the company says search is coming back soon.

Vimeo's videos play as you're flipping through the thumbnails

9. Audiobox

If you're big on cloud storage as a means of hosting your music, then do check out Audiobox. Audiobox can pick up and stream tracks from a diverse set of sources, including Google Drive, Dropbox, Box, Ubuntu One, SkyDrive, Soundcloud or YouTube. If you'd rather not trust these services with your data, you can access your personal music connection remotely by installing the desktop app for Mac or Windows. The iOS app received a complete overhaul, making use of several iOS 7 motifs, including new typography and iconography. The app now sports a slide-out navigation drawer that lists all your cloud sources, along with support for AirPlay and Lock Screen controls.

Audiobox lets you stream music from almost any cloud service

10. Facebook

Facebook's new iOS 7 app sports a much cleaner design