

Play mirroring feature to watch these talks on your Apple TV. You can use the Inspire Me feature that automatically curates a playlist for you depending on your mood and time available at hand.

20. Brewster

Brewster is a refreshing take on the Contacts app, one that promises to never let you fall out-of-touch with your friends. It aggregates contact data from your iPhone's address book, Twitter, Facebook, Gmail, Instagram, Foursquare and LinkedIn. The app gently reminds you if you haven't communicated with one of your contacts in a while using large, visually attractive photos of your friends pulled from social networks. If you're travelling to a new city, it searches for friends living in the city to catch up with after work. Brewster aims to replace your address book completely, and I daresay they're doing a good job of achieving their goal.

21. Delicious

Delicious is a service that lets you curate and maintain a set of links from across the web, tag them and store them for future reference. It also has a social aspect to it, allowing you to follow other users and see what links they're sharing. The official iPhone app for iOS 7 got a visual refresh, with a cleaner and flatter design, and also features autocompletion for users, tags and keywords across all your links. You can also save links from your Twitter timeline, making archiving your favourite websites and articles a breeze. 