

INDIE-PENDENCE

The high, lows and promises of life as an indie developer

With the explosive growth of smartphones and tablets, app development is no longer a hobby but a viable career choice. We speak to four promising independent developers, who've all witnessed varying amounts of success, about what it means to be an indie developer and what people looking to join the ranks should know.

Sreekanth Sastry

The line-up

Sreekanth Sastry

Sreekanth, a Bangalore resident, is a software professional with a history of working with startups and established companies. He has now started Antarajaal, a company developing vernacular lifestyle mobile apps for iOS and Android. He is behind 'Situational Gita', an app that recently broke into the Top 10 paid apps list on the Indian iTunes App Store.