

skill is required. Many of the designs on the website are free to use however creators can also sell their designs at any price with the website taking 30 percent of the sale price. Check out its new Beta version online.

3DBurrito is currently in Beta stages of its new redesign and promises a wider range of options soon. Sign up!

3. 3DExport - This website is one of the largest online communities of 3D modelling designers and shared content. 3DExport has over 150,000 member with new designs cropping up every day. The website has a user friendly interface and is easy to navigate. Started nearly 10 years ago, 3DExport has evolved from having general 3D CAD designs to 3D printing designs as well. The website offers a non-exclusive licensing contract to the sellers on the platform under which creators receive 60-70 percent of total sales.
4. 3D Studio - 3D Studio is another one of the old school forums of 3D design that has blossomed into an active marketplace. For serious and professional designers 3D Studio has proven to be a valuable resource of earnings and profit. The website has proven exceptional at providing a balance between customer satisfaction and creator rights by keeping artist margins stable and high. They also allow creators to freely sell their designs in other places instead of locking them under exclusivity contracts. Currently, designers get 60 percent of all sales.
5. Azavy - Azavy can be called the eBay of 3D print designs as it uses a Azavy and other marketplace sites sell a unique variety of objects at profitable prices.

bidding format on in its marketplace in order to generate sales and competitive prices. Users can set up an account with Azavy and upload their own creations to the Azavy gallery. At the same time, the website hosts owners of 3D