

guitar is a pretty straightforward process though, and doesn't need any innate talent (like singing does, for example). The internet is full of guitar lessons, but most are haphazard and won't give you a real sense of progress.

Justin Guitar, though, is a one-stop shop for everything guitar-related. Justin, the creator of the site, has put together hundreds of video tutorials, covering all levels of difficulty, starting with the absolute beginner (including a guide on how to buy your first guitar), to the more experienced, and even practice tips and exercises for those who've been playing the guitar for a while. Apart from teaching you how to play the guitar, it also teaches you other skills that are essential to any guitarist, like learning to tune and restring your guitar, training your ear, getting started with recording your music and even learning the basics of music theory. He covers a wide range of musical styles, including jazz, blues, country and rock, even going into songwriting and making your own music. Needless to say, no matter what level of guitar mastery you're at, you'll definitely to suit your need.

Justin has detailed lessons for guitarists of all levels.
