

6 Duolingo (<http://dgit.in/FTDuolingo>)

Learning a second (or for us Indians, a third) language is extremely useful in today's day and age, but it's not an easy skill to acquire. Experts differ on the right way to teach a new language, and the internet is full of websites that claim to teach you in a new language in 21 days or less. Such claims should be taken with a grain of salt, especially if your aim is to become fluent in this language,

Duolingo is an innovative website, that gamifies the process of learning a new language, and makes it a social experience. It offers free lessons in French, German, Italian, Spanish and Japanese, and offers highly visual, highly interactive tutorials for these languages, that train your grammar, spelling and even pronunciation. Each language is broken down into different levels, and you earn coins for every level you complete. Taking a lesson is like playing a computer game, where for every wrong answer, you lose a 'life'. Each ques-

Duolingo gamifies the process of learning a language

tion has a discussion attached to it, where experts from the Duolingo team help you out with any difficulties you have. As you progress in your learning, you'll be required to translate certain pieces of text from the language you're learning back to English and vice-versa, which is Duolingo's whole primary goal - to translate every piece of text on the Internet into as many languages as possible. Duolingo also has free apps on Android and iOS so you can put those long queues and commutes to some good use!