

DISTANCE EDUCATION VS. E-LEARNING

While the two methods of dispensing education do overlap in some aspects, each has its own distinct features that set them apart

Earlier, a Distance Education course was the only way to access education remotely. But now, advanced communication technology has introduced to us a new mode of delivery called 'E-Learning'. With time, distance education has also evolved to incorporate new modes of communication and hence is often confused with E-Learning. The two methodologies do overlap in certain areas, but each has its own distinguishing qualities.

What is Distance Learning?

Distance learning is mostly about self-study and is a concept that's been here much before e-learning. Distance learning doesn't require your presence on the campus for the lectures. Here, the course material is sent through
