

is no fully featured free app available which can give a perfect replica of a desktop application. But despite these limitations there are a surprisingly large number of apps that can help edit and play around with video clips shot on mobile devices towards interesting outcomes. Most of these apps are restricted to specific platforms but between them provide a lot of tools that can help improve, compose and create imaginative footage effects.

Magisto - Magical Video Editor

Get it at: <http://dgit.in/MagistoiOS>

Run it on: Android and iOS

If you've looked around for a fun, easy to use and popular video editor then you've surely come across Magisto. The free video editing app is available in the iTunes and Android stores and has made a name for itself due to its very simple learning curve. A perfect app for people who want to quickly get editing on the phone without much delay Magisto does a fine job. Users just need to select the videos and photos, if needed, that they wish to make into a video through the app. The next step is just labelling the production and selecting an audio track for the video. That's it! The app also has a video highlight option that uses proprietary algorithms to select the best photographs and clips on your phone, and then matches them up with effects and transitions to make a smooth, fun looking video. With its most recent update it also includes a Surprise option that can be configured to automatically make a video from the pics and videos from a specific event so by the time you reach home there is a short video highlighting your whole events experience. Of course, this app is meant for those people who are willing to lose control over the edit for the extreme user-friendliness of the automated features. So don't be disappointed if you can't keyframe your own transitions.

Viddy

Get it at: <http://dgit.in/ViddyAnd>

Run it on: Android and iOS

Although Viddy is part of the social sharing part of multimedia it is nonetheless a fun and interesting way to have your videos edited. The app was the only video sharing app before Instagram began offering video services as well. The Viddy app allows users to take short clips of maximum 30 seconds in length and to layer filters with music to create snippets. Unlike Vine or Instagram the relative ease of use combined with the ability to add