ripe old age, and meets "Death" as an equal at King's Cross Station.

The theory takes it one step further by explaining that not only was Dumbledore Death, he was training Harry to succeed him in that role all along. You can tell that his choice was not misplaced as Harry willingly gave away all three hallows throughout the course of his life.

TYRION IS THE SON OF DAENERYS AND DROGO

Technically, the theory is known as D+D=T, which is more than a little weird. According to the theory, Tyrion is the son of Dany and Khal Drogo.

Something bizarre happened in the tent with Mirri Maz Duur. After the ritual, Dany had a stillborn who appeared dead for years. Flashback to the birth of Tyrion, his appearance was monstrous even as a baby. Dany's stillborn had leathery wings and a tail. It appears that Mirri Maz Duur switched Joanna Lannister and Dany's babies while they were still in the womb. The actual nature of the monstrosities of the two babies are not the same, Dany's stillborn had reptilian characteristics, such as scales, while Tyrion had mammalian characteristics at birth, including a beard.

Further evidence in support of the DDT theory is how closely Tyrion's story tracks that of Oedipus. Both walk funny, are hated despite saving their people, are disowned by their fathers, and end up killing their fathers. If Tyrion marries Dany, the story will be complete. WALL-E IS EVIL

The cute little robot who eventually is willing to sacrifice himself to save humanity - what's there not to love, right? But thanks to a theory by Reddit user Vexelius (<http://dgit.in/WallEvil>), Wall-E's actions are thrown into new light.

Consider this, humanity is living on a spaceship. They have little to do, and have grown morbidly obese, but most of the issues that plague us today - war, religion, hunger, discrimination - seem to be non-existent on the ship. They live a comfortable life where all they need is at their disposal and taken care of by robots. Why would anyone want to go back to the barren wasteland that Earth was at this point? They are basically in paradise.

Then along comes Wall-E, who gives Eve a seedling (the name does ring a bell, doesn't it?), which sparks off a desire in the normally pliant captain to return to Earth. This ends up in humans losing their comfortable existence and starting off a life on Earth where they toil for their existence and seem to be headed towards our current state. As the theory states, "It wouldn't be surprising if, generations later, the people in Wall-E's universe starts telling tales of a time when they lived in a place of eternal bliss, until a tempter gave a woman named Eve a plant, which led to mankind's downfall."

THE POKÉMON WAR

There are a number of theories about the Pokémon universe which point to a singular, important event in their timeline - the Great Pokémon War. According to this theory, there was a great war in the Pokémon world prior to the events of the first game in the series. Most of the middle aged adults were drafted in the war and died, which is why you see so few adults around you.

Lt. Surge is the gym Leader of the Vermilion Gym. He hands out the Thunder Badge to Trainers who defeat him. At one point, he mentions that 'the electric Pokémon saved him during the war'. The war angle also explains the lack of infrastructure in the initial days of the series apart from gyms, hospitals and other facilities - with the focus being on training and traveling to build the next generation of soldiers.

The best part of this theory is where it connects to Pokémon Go. According to this theory, the events of Pokémon Go are a prequel to the main series. Indications include candies being given to Pokémon, and gym leaderships changing frequently. Eventually, the three factions in the game, are said to go to war over issues ranging from synthetic Pokémon to supremacy.
