Armour design in Sci-Fi

From a second skin that uses nanotechnology to powered exoskeletons to dominating mecha suits, there is a wide range of armour in science fiction.

MASTER CHIEF

The Master Chief wears many versions of the Mjolnir powered assault armour in the Halo games. Filters remove toxins from the atmosphere, and integrated biofoam provides temporary medical care to combat wounds. There is also a neural lace connecting the suit and the wearer.

GOLIATH POWERED ARMOUR

Used by the Martian Marine Corps in the sci-fi series, The Expanse, the armour provides effective protection against small arms fire. There is an integrated mini gun on the wrist with armour piercing or explosive rounds. Rockets can be fired from the backs.

CRYNET NANOSUIT

With two versions, the CryNet Nanosuit is made from advanced alien technologies. The suit can switch between armour, speed, strength and cloak modes depending on the operator's needs. The advanced version actively monitors and adjusts the body chemistry of the wearer.

WARFRAME

Warframes are upgradeable suits, possibly with limited sentience, that can be controlled by the operators using a process called transference. Warframes have shields, and are very agile, hence are used for missions in various kinds of environments across the solar system.

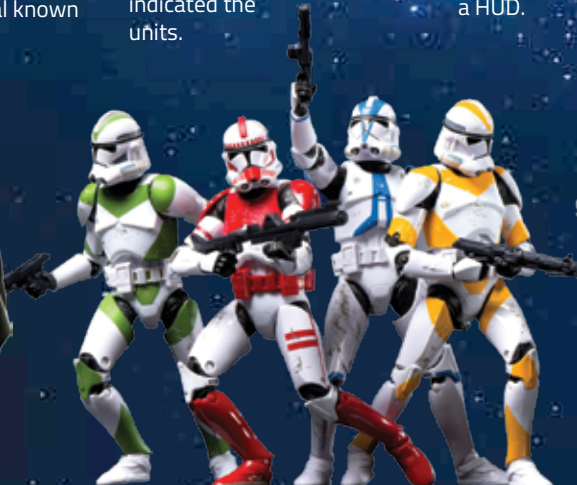

MANDALORIAN ARMOUR

The armour of the Storm Troopers are based on the Mandalorian armour made from a durable metal known as beskar.

CLONE TROOPERS

The clone troopers were foot-soldiers of the Galactic Republic. The various colourations indicated the units.

STORMTROOPER

The Stormtroopers wore a black body glove, over which the white plastoid armour was placed. The helmets had a HUD.

DEATH TROOPER

Death Troopers were part of an elite squad used for intelligence purposes. Their helmets scrambled communications.
