app that can manage your controller profiles. MOGA is a well-known for making really good controllers and we've tried out some of their older units. Unfortunately, given the fragmentation of Android across the entire gamut of smartphones, compatibility has been an issue. All of that changed for the better with Android 4.0 which brought native support for controllers. So as I set about hunting for a nice controller, I came across a couple of really good ones and I would hate to keep those to myself.

GameSir G5

First up is the Moga Hero Power which pretty much has the same design characteristics that most MOGA controllers have – two analog sticks, one D-pad, four buttons and two triggers. The button placement is similar to that of the Xbox controllers so the familiarity makes it very easy to get used to. Then there is the Pyrus Telescopic controller which expands sideways and holds the mobile in the centre. It too has the same set of control options as the MOGA Hero Power but the configuration has both analog sticks at the top so it's more symmetric.

If these brands seem alien to you then you can always check out controllers such as the Stratus XL by Steelseries or the Razer Serval which are well-known PC peripheral manufacturers. Just know that the Stratus XL mimics the Dual Shock 4 control configuration while the Serval mimics the Xbox One control configuration.

The controllers mentioned above are all good but none of them have been exceptional the way the Steam controller turned out to be. For mobile controllers, I believe it'll have to be the GameSir G5. It's built for FPS and MOBA titles so there are way more buttons than all the previous controllers we've seen. Also, the controller has one analog stick and one D-pad while on the other side there is a touchpad instead of the second analog stick. In MOBA games, this is way better when you are selecting a skill and targeting the same. The same can be said for FPS titles because the touchpad or right analog stick is what you use for the firearm cursor and you get a much granular level of control. No wonder the GameSir G5 got backed on Kickstarter within a couple of days. Unfortunately, I couldn't back it in time. So I'll have to wait till it's back in stock for non-backers. What about you guys? Have you come across better controllers than the G5? If so, drop me a line, I'm all ears. A

BUYING ADVICE

A TV UNDER ₹30,000

Q Hey Agent001! Please suggest a TV for around ₹30,000. Also, don't suggest any Xiaomi TVs since there are no service centres around my place.

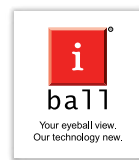

–Sarika Pant

A Hey Sarika, you didn't suggest what size you wanted or what all features you are looking for. For a jack-of-all-trades TV, you can check out

jack of all trades

the TCL L40D2900 which retails for ₹26.5K. It has a 1080p screen with adaptive backlight dimming and two 8 W (RMS) speakers. However, since you haven't mentioned where you are located, we can't even tell if there are TCL service centres in your area. A
