

Robert Sovereign-Smith

Profile

Contact Info

Timeline

Photos

Videos

Friends

Messages

Pokes

Events

Security

Ads

Applications

Profile

Registration Date

Emails

Address

Neighborhood

Phones

Birthday

Gender

Current City

Relationship Status

Family

https://www.facebook.com/raasbo

Tuesday, May 15, 2007 at 3:25pm UTC+08

raasbo@gmail.com
raasbo@facebook.com(Previous Email)
raasbo@raasbo.com(Previous Email)

Perth, WA, Australia

0449 (Mobile)

July 6, 1977

Male

Perth, Western Australia

Married to Karen Sovereign Smith since July 5, 2003

David Young (Cousin)
Tom Lewis (2 sons, married)
Karen Sovereign Smith (Sister)
David Young (2 sons, married)
Karen (Young) Lewis (married)
Karl (Sister of Young, married)

Here's what a downloaded Archive looks like

Robert Sovereign-Smith

Profile

Contact Info

Timeline

Photos

Videos

Friends

Messages

Pokes

Events

Security

Ads

Applications

Name

Contacts

Amit

contact: +91

Nare

contact: +91
contact: +91

Lalla

contact: +91

Sande

contact: +17
contact: +17
contact: +91

Hom

contact: +64
contact: +64

Don

contact: +91
contact: +91
contact: +61

Prav

contact: +91

Abhi

contact: +91

Sang

contact: +91

Salin

contact: +91

Raje

contact: +91

Facebook had 678 contacts from my phone book (I have more), and it looks like an older list from 2014. I strictly deny access to contacts now, but it still has 678 people including all of the carpenters and plumbers I've ever called and also my doctors!

contact information. What exactly is this contact information? We don't really know. It could be your phone number, full name, email addresses, city, marital status, and pretty much all data you have shared openly without clear restrictions. There's a nice little cross button there that looks like a delete option, but don't be fooled, all it does is hide further ads from this advertiser. Hiding the ads is not going to command the advertiser to delete your data, and they will still be able to target you via different means. For example, I found that Domino's Pizza were listed location-wise (India, Australia and New Zealand), and each was a different advertiser in Facebook's view. Honestly, you're just never getting away from advertisers getting your contact details if you're on Facebook, and even deleting your account is not going to change that. You could try changing your name, nationality and moving to a different corner of the Earth to live off the land without a digital identity, but you're not going to, so just get used to the fact that Facebook knows everything about you. Also get used to the fact that they don't delete anything, even if they make it look like they're doing that. Finally, the whole Cambridge Analytica scandal made the term Psychographics commonplace, and Facebook is probably the second best of the big services (or second worst, depending on your perspective) at making a truly accurate psychographic profile of you. I hope the only thing that might shock you about that last paragraph is that I consider Facebook to be the second best/worst at psychographics...

2. Google

Although based more on an informed guess than insider knowledge, Google is who I consider to be the absolute king of data being stored about me. First things first, go to myaccount.google.com and sign in if you need to. Now you're going to see a lot of settings on the left that you should explore. Like most people on Earth I use an Android phone, and this means that Google has access to all my contacts, details about my location, all of the apps I use, and even how much time I spend on each app. They obviously cannot tell what I'm doing inside most apps, but they certainly know what I'm doing inside their own apps. You should also go to takeout.google.com to download a copy of all your data, so you can see what Google has on you.

So what are the Google apps I use? Gmail, obviously, and this means that Google pretty much has enough data on me just from Gmail to make a pretty detailed psychographic profile. Both work and personal emails run on gmail, so it's safe to say Google knows everything there is to know about me. But it's not just Gmail that matters, because I also use Google for my calendar functionality, which means it knows every meeting I've had and the collaborators marked on those meetings. Not too worrisome for me, honestly, but if I ever meet with a Google whistleblower, I will make it a point to not mark that appointment in my calendar.