The works of Hayao Miyazaki and the Disney films inspired the design of the majestic dragon, Smaug in The Hobbit movies.

The amphibious man from The Shape of Water had deadly features like fang-like teeth and sharp talons. These were masterfully combined with endearing elements like the large eyes. It took over two years for the design to be realized in a foam latex prosthetic suit that could be worn by actor Doug Jones, who frequently appears in Del Toro movies as various entities.

Sarel, or the Master from The Strain is an ancient and gigantic vampire, without a nose or any hair on his skin.

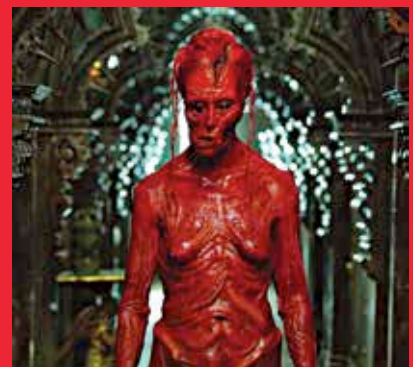

One of the many inventive characters in Hellboy II: The Golden Army, the Angel of Death has many eyes embedded on his wings.

Similar to the Shape of Water, Abraham Sapien from The Hellboy movies is also an amphibious man with healing capabilities.

Striker Eureka is a towering mecha that has 9 Kaiju kills to its name. Brawling its way out of engagements, it compromises agility for raw power.

The red ghosts in the gothic horror movie Crimson Peak did away with the traditional white colour, and showed deteriorated bodies.
