

Stephen Spielberg making a DC movie
Stephen Spielberg is planning to direct a retro, wartime DC movie based on their WWII aerial ace, Blackhawk <https://digit.in/blckhawk>

Hazardous Fortnite addiction
Anton William from North Carolina continues to play Fortnite as he watches his neighbour's roof come flying off. <https://digit.in/fornite>

The Homunculi, also known as “tooth fairies” are tiny yet terrifying monsters that emerge from an underground crypt in Don't Be Afraid of the Dark.

The Faun or Pan in Pan's Labyrinth is there to help the protagonist through her three tasks, but nevertheless, has creepy undertones.

Unlike the orcs in the LOTR trilogy, the goblins in The Hobbit had significant speaking roles, so the character designs were more articulated.

The forest elemental in Hellboy II was a giant tentacled being, the last of its kind. Shown here is the sketch in Del Toro's diary.

Mr Wink from Hellboy II is an ancient cave troll, with each hand having only three fingers and a thumb. His right hand is a metal fist, which is actually a flail in disguise. The metal fist can be launched at enemies for some amount of ranged combat, and is attached to the rest of the arm with a chain. The fist can be reeled back in after the engagement.

The Reapers had an artificially accelerated metabolism, which made them even more bloodthirsty than regular vampires in Blade II.

Though never mentioned by name in Pacific Rim, Slattern is the only known category V Kaiju, and is one of the most dangerous monsters around.

The Pale Man from Pan's Labyrinth is a horrifying monster that eats children and has his eyeballs located on his palms.