

Everything!

THE ANNIVERSARY ISSUE is always a crazy time for all of us. Way before it even starts, usually while we're closing April issue, and then even during the May issue, we're usually going back and forth throwing up ideas for what we can do. Sometimes one idea just stands out so much that we just drop everything else and work towards that. Sometimes we're not so lucky, and two or three ideas are all equally tempting.

Arguments are had, shouting is common, tempers flare... all because we passionately believe one idea more than the others best serves the majority of our readers. Then there was this anniversary issue.

The Mod Everything idea is the one that arose first, and it's why it's the cover story on this side of the magazine. As geeks, we know you share our pain of never quite being satisfied with any product out there. (Except Mangalyaan, which was a perfect 100 for all time!). Most people call us nitpicky, and we get a lot of angry phone calls from a few brands who genuinely believe in and love their own products just as much as we love Digit. And believe us, we understand their pain, because they have often worked for years, tirelessly on a product, with painstaking precision, only to have one of us rip the product apart because it did something totally stupid.

However, we know that we represent you, and most of you are exactly like that. You're not the average Joes who don't know any better and follow the world like good little sheep, you're the discerning few who hate a little of everything. We all have a little BooMan in us, don't we? In that spirit, the Mod Everything story is perfect, because who else knows what we want better than ourselves.

Seemed perfect until the next idea of an Ultimate Geek Buying Guide arose. Now we were stuck between a rock and a hard place. Obviously you would want to mod something you bought, but then you'd first want to know what to buy, right? Sort of like chicken and egg that one. So we decided, enough arguing, let's do both!

We even themed the Fast Track to the modding idea, because after all, that's what Android is really known for – being customisable.

If that wasn't all, we decided to do CTC as well, which is a much bigger nightmare to design than to play, take our word for it.

Then someone decided if we're going to do a buying guide, it means people are going to want to buy some stuff, right? So why not help our readers buy stuff by getting them cashbacks, or discounts? The result is the ₹500 cashback coupon you see below this column.

Now usually, all of this would make for an absolutely insane month, and there were a fair share of setbacks with people falling ill, power failures, and a crazy amount of coordination between all of the people you will see in the Team Digit pictures later... but I decided to throw another spanner in the works and demand that we also do the Next Decade topic and make it a double issue! Thankfully I'm not in India, or I think I certainly would have been physically attacked... several times...

I guess what I'm trying to say is, I hope you like the package of content you hold in your hands, because Team Digit nearly killed themselves to get it to you... As for me, I'm just thrilled to be a part of a team that works this hard to make sure that every single reader has something they love about the magazine.
