

RealMe 1 launches in India

Oppo's sub-brand, RealMe, launched its first device, the RealMe 1 in India with 6GB RAM for Rs. 13,999 only. <https://digit.in/jun18-B51-1>

YouTube tests incognito mode

YouTube has begun testing 'incognito' mode, usually found in Chrome, in its Android app. <https://digit.in/jun18-B51-2> to the path forward and saying that the CEO and other such officials are no longer going to be the only ones telling a story to their patrons. The evangelist will step in, grasp the vision of the company and take over the job of creating loyal followers for the company.

The most important thing to remember here is that the TE will at no point speak directly about the company. It is their sole job to ensure that their work in the field is helping to educate people about the latest trends, challenges they could bring or any other problems in the industry.

JOB DESCRIPTION OF THE EVANGELIST

The job description of the TE includes being able to live out of a suitcase. Why, you ask? One of the most common ways to interact with industry patrons is at conferences. Most TEs spend hours at conferences across cities and countries giving expert talks. Conducting workshops is another great way to get out in the field and interact with customers. TEs also give a lot of interviews, depending on their experience in the industry.

THE JOURNEY WON'T BE EASY

As the subtitle indicates, becoming an evangelist is not child's play. You do not wake up one morning and realise you are an expert. It takes patience, dedication and tons of passion. Most TEs will start off their career path in different jobs or roles. It could be marketing, sales, development or anything under the sun. But with patience, you can build up a name for yourself. The more you blog, the more you network, the more people know you, the more likely they are to be interested in hearing what you have to say. Part of the job is creating a niche for yourself.

IS THIS THE RIGHT JOB FOR ME?

Being a tech evangelist may sound all glamorous (and it also is a lot of the time), but it is loads of work. There are certain skill sets that could make the job easier. To know if this is right up your alley, use our checklist.

Relatability

Companies need to remember that their customers are smart. They will see through a facade very easily. That's one of the primary reasons why a TE's job exists in the first place. It is imperative to create relatability to ensure that your patrons like the TE. From the company's perspective, the best way to ensure success as a TE is finding someone from the same industry who shares common past with the customers of the company. For instance, if the company makes a product that is targeted at developers, it will help to have an evangelist who was once a developer and knows how to develop a prototype using your product. It's simple. People are more likely to believe someone that they can relate to and someone who can say "been there, done that".

What this means for you is that you need to be extremely sure about what industry you want to turn TE for. It needs to be one where you have the necessary expertise or experience. If you are a fresher right out of college and want to become a TE, you need to have the passion to see you through. It is not impossible, but might take you a decent amount of time to get people and companies to take you seriously. But once they do, there is no going back.

Passion

Technical Evangelism is not a run-of-the-mill 9 to 5 job. It requires passion by the truckloads to become a successful TE and some day, possibly, a chief evangelist. But getting there will mean countless hours, days and months of work. You may have to work through the weekends for months at end sometimes. Most conferences and seminars would mean endless travel miles. Remember how we said you will have to be ready to live out of a suitcase. We meant it. The only way you can survive all of this if this is more than a job to you. You need to absolutely love what you do. And that is possibly the only way you will be able to see success in the field of tech evangelism.

Storytelling

'Once upon a time, there was a great tech evangelist who went by the name _____. If you ever want to see your name fill in that blank, you need to up your storytelling skills. The one skill that any TE cannot survive without is communication. Communication skills are the oxygen that keep a TE alive in his/her industry. As a TE, you will need to write blogs, post about

You need the quality passion in spades to be a successful evangelist. Working nights and 24 hours might become the norm the latest trends, give interviews on current affair topics, author guest articles, etc etc. You get the drift. Basically, your success ratio as a TE could be directly proportional to your communication skills. It also helps if you can make people laugh.

So, when it comes to tech companies, the TE is the new brand ambassador. The TE will combine up-to-date industry knowledge along with excellent communication skills. Think of the TE as the middleman. He/She is the one who helps the customer communicate with the company and vice versa. It is an extremely important role and one that brings with it tons of responsibility. So, if this is a job title that you do happen to choose tomorrow, we sincerely hope that you can take your loyal patrons to the proverbial promised land and be the true evangelist that you are.