

Yoga affects brainwaves

When meditators take deep breaths through their nose it causes nerves in their nasal passages to fire more slowly. <https://digit.in/sep18-12-1>

Dangerous stretching

While it is true that we should warm up, before exercise holding a static stretch is definitely not the way to go about it. <https://digit.in/sep18-12-2> d Hi Nidhi,

I am glad to know that you liked my work.

To start off, when we write about startups, our information is usually collated from a multitude of sources spread across different platforms, other media houses, previous coverage on our own platform, as well as contributions and insights from industry experts and is also highly dependent on the area of specialisation that we are focussing on. This is because the startup scene is way too huge for one portal or platform to be able to cover all of it equally well. However, there are a couple of really helpful sources that are consistently putting out good Startup related content. Considering that your query was quite broad, I've tried to list a few of them here that I feel will best serve your purposes:

- Techcrunch's startup portal is one of the most well designed and consistently updated sources for startup news globally.
- VCCircle has some excellent coverage on the latest updates in the Indian startup scene.

- Government of India's Startup India portal is one of the most consistent sources of statistics related to Indian startups. You should also follow their social media profiles.
- Additionally, you can find a bunch of helpful documents here: <https://digit.in/StartupLinks>.
- Along with this, stay tuned to the Startup Corner section in our magazine, and maybe also write in to us with your own inputs after your paper is done.

—Arnab

Letter of the Month

Hey Digit, I am a huge fan of your mag and your huge variety of information and collections from around the world. I have been reading our magazine for the past 2 years now, and really enjoyed your content that you provide in the Dual-Layer DVDs. This is going to be a long email. A few suggestions:

1. Please try to provide DIY content in every edition of your magazine. I had once read about cardboard fun section in one of your editions and that was the first DIY in your mag.
2. Please try to improve the user-interface in your website. Reduce the amount of ad-content and try to embed more information and please divide the content into divide it different sections.
3. In the DVDs you give away essential software like antivirus, browser updates, graphic card driver updates and other things. In the antivirus section please try to include a .vps file for avast! antivirus software update.
4. Try to provide more information about the current updates about the current and the geek world or at least the links to be included in the DVD.
5. Also in the website that you have try to include a subscription based email newsletter to provide its users with the news, offers and updates round the world.
6. You have started to provide distros of Linux operating systems. Try to accommodate the 32 bit versions of the os as well. The same with the softwares you provide. And please don't try to ignore or stop supporting the 32-bit oses. Though the use of this OS may look like they're declining, they still make up a decent part of the cyberspace.
7. The full contents of the links that you provide in the header of the pages can be provided in a form a of a pdf file in the DVDs for non-internet customers or limited data bandwidth users.

8. Please try to bring a change in your front page, logo, and type of font styles.

—Acer One (Anonymous letter)

Hey Anonymous / Acer One

1. I hope you mean that was the first DIY article you read in Digit, because we've been doing DIYs for 17 years now! We will try and do more, and you might have a surprise extra book coming soon that you might like.
2. A redesign in underway, but the site is a mammoth project, and takes over a year to change. Sites as big as ours are a nightmare to change, but we promise, it's coming!
3. We're thinking of stopping the essentials altogether actually. Best to get the definitions automatically from the antivirus software's site itself.
4. The DVD might be undergoing a very drastic change now, and you might like what it will become.
5. You can drop an email to help@digit.in and opt in to our newsletters.
6. 32-bit is gone. Sorry, but it just is. Every single computer worth running today is 64-bit, and it's just too niche.
7. We are working on a solution to this. It cannot be included on the DVD because the DVD is replicated before these snippets are added in the magazine. DVD replication happens around 16th of the previous month, and the mag is printed around 24th of the previous month. Plus, these are often links to other sites whose data we cannot legally download and share, merely point to...
8. A redesign isn't due for at least a year more. What do you not like, in particular?
9. You win letter of the month, but you're going to have to stop being anonymous if you want the mystery gift :-P

—Robert

