There's an app for that - WTF Android apps

Are you running Android? Are you tired of all those 'productivity-enhancing' apps cluttering your phone? In the mood for something out of the ordinary? Read ahead to find out about the weirdest results of that "Dude, we should totally make this an app" conversation everyone has had.

HOLD ON, LITERALLY

Great for distracting young kids, putting yourself to sleep, or developing arthritis a few decades early, Hold On tests the true limits of human endurance. How long can you keep the button pressed? The developers were clearly expecting things to get competitive - they show you your time right up to the millisecond. Don't miss its debut at the 2020 Olympics for People with Too Much Free Time.

Note that this is not for the faint of heart. User Senpai Kawaii's review: "65m & 55s 4/5 stars, but still better than Call of duty, by the way it broke my thumb"

Exhilarating, right?

RUNPEE DURING ANY MOVIE

App developers want to protect you from even the slightest inconveniences of human drudgery. Ever gulped down that soda a little too fast at the start of a thriller? RunPee tells you the best time to take a leak during any movie. But it doesn't stop there - it's a genuinely helpful movie companion, giving you synopses of parts you missed (even if you arrive late), vibrating discretely before the best moment to pee, and telling you in advance about after-credits scenes. Sometimes, a good thing starts as, well, just a weird thing.

UBER FOR CUDDLES

It's a modern wasteland we're living in, starved of human companionship, eyes and hands always glued to silicon-chip mistresses, souls atrophying in loneliness. Seeking Cuddles is here to heal you. On-demand cuddles to remind you of the warmth of a human's touch, a simple conversation, and genuine friendliness.

"I told you, no hookups!"

Strictly platonic though, so no hookups.

POOPLOG, A LOG FOR POOP

Don't you sometimes get the urge to... plot on a map every place you've ever, erm, unloaded? Doesn't it bother you that you have no record of everywhere you've ever, erm, marked your territory? Isn't it just the worst that you can't ever share your toilet-related achievements with your family, friends, acquaintances, landlords, and every weirdo on your Facebook friend list? Pooplog makes all this and more possible. And in case you were wondering - yes, you can export your logs (ugh, pardon the pun) to Excel.

YO

It's the 21st century, yo. There isn't that much to say anyway. Yo lets you say

Yo to all your friends. And then they can say Yo back to you. And you can reply, Yo. Sometimes, they might double-Yo you, and you can feel loved and important. Once in a while, you should do it back to them. No triple-Yo's though, that's just needy.

VIRTUAL LIGHTER

Smoking is terrible for you, and if you haven't quit yet, let's hope you're the exception to the statistical facts. "But," you implore, "then how can I do that cool lighter-waving thing at concerts?" There's an app for that. Virtual Lighter lets you be old-school at concerts without enabling eventual lung cancer or draining your battery with the flash.

DOOMSDAY COUNTDOWN

Doomsday Countdown is exactly what the doctor ordered for your paranoia. Just set the date that you know the world is going to end (giving the Mayans another chance, are we?), and let it tick down. No more last minute rush to get your apocalyptic supplies ready!
