

Wolverine black costume

Wolverine's new black costume has been revealed by Marvel, making its debut when the Return of Wolverine event begins. <https://digit.in/sep18-55-1>

Galaga Animated TV Show

A TV adaptation of the classic video game Galaga, with the ShadowMachine animation studio in the works. <https://digit.in/sep18-55-2>

Elon Musk, You Suck

Why Elon Musk is just another human, sometimes...

Boo Man | boo@digit.in

U sually you have to wait for people who are universally loved to die, and only then you will start hearing more about how they were not all that they were supposed to be. Name every hero you've ever had, and eventually you will find some dirt being dug up about them. Why is it that we find it so hard to accept criticism of people we like? And if we make their halo fall off, or even sit a little crooked on their big heads, why is that a bad thing? In my regular column in this mag, you will see that I've told you why I suck, and I'm sure my colleagues can probably give you several more reasons as to why I suck. [Editor's note: not several, several hundred more...]

So let's look at the the incident with the Thai football team rescue. When it was all happening, someone tweeted that Elon Musk should get involved, and so he did. He had a team of engineers work around the clock developing a small submarine that could get the boys out one at a time, and was in touch with one of the lead divers in the cave. They were worried about some of the weaker and smaller boys, and made it clear to Musk that his solution was a plan B if conditions worsened. Credit to Musk that he continued working on the sub, and genuinely wanted to help. So far so good. Then when the divers decided not to use the sub, Musk claimed the Thai official in charge of the rescue was not the "rescue chief". Some things were said back and forth, and one of the divers came out and made a stupid remark about it all being a PR stunt on Musk's part, and that he should shove his submarine where it hurts. Agreed, that was a dumb thing to do, but then Musk decided to outdo him by calling him a pedophile – insinuating that all older British men living in Thailand were suspect... and then things went crazy. Tesla stock dropped, the internet was divided (as usual), and people were arguing over what was essentially two grown men acting like hot headed idiots.

Of course Musk came back into damage control mode and apologised, deleted those tweets, etc, but the damage was done. He had shown that he was indeed human, and was capable of being quite silly. Despite being the crazy billionaire who will get us to Mars and give us electric supercars, he's also just another guy, who can be goaded into doing or saying stupid things...

It's not the first time Musk's off the cuff rants have made him look like a petulant child either. In December 2017, Wired published some remarks he had made at a Tesla event: "I think public transport is painful. It sucks. Why do you want to get on something with a lot of other people, that doesn't leave where you want it to leave, doesn't start where you want it to start, doesn't end where you want it to end? And it doesn't go all the time." ... "It's a pain in the ass. That's why everyone doesn't like it. And there's like a bunch of random strangers, one of who might be a serial killer, OK, great. And so that's why people like individualized transport, that goes where you want, when you want."

Now, of course, people were quick to point out his involvement in the Boring company and Hyperloop, both involved in some form of public transport or the other. Spokespeople for Musk responded saying he wasn't against public transport in the future, just the present state of it. We will let you decide what he meant.

In March 2018 there were reports that Tesla, which was struggling to meet demand for their cars, were working people at a crazy pace, and being too demanding of production schedules. Some workers reported that they were getting physical injuries because of being worked too hard, and wanted to form a workers union to protect against this. They were promptly fired by Musk and management. Of course Musk was himself spending nights in the factory, but people are divided over whether he should demand that from his workers.

More and more such cases will emerge, because Musk is just that popular, and everything he does is held up to scrutiny. Many would say let him have his inflated ego, because if we get to Mars because of it, it's worth it. Others would disagree. Whatever the case, it shouldn't shock you that eccentric billionaires are people too... Nobody's perfect, and if the eyes of the world were on you, how many chinks in your armour would they find? 