NANDISH BANSHI DIECAST MODEL COLLECTOR

DAYJOB: IT PROFESSIONAL

What made you start your collection?

It all started during my Engineering semester holidays in 2003 when I used to spend most of my time flipping the pages of automotive magazines, looking for good colorful pictures of motorcycles. This fascination for Automobiles invoked an interest in building models of motorcycles using thermocol sheets and Balsawood. By the time I started earning, my attention slowly shifted towards diecast scale models. I started collecting the 1:18 Maisto motorcycle models as those were affordable than the 1:18 car models those days. Being into this crazy hobby over a decade, I now have close to 500 models.

How can someone, today, start building a collection like yours?

The most important thing for a beginner is, to know/identify what kind of models one wants to collect and set up a theme for collection such as the Formula one cars, classic vintage cars, motorcycles, race cars, trucks, buses etc which would be valuable once it reaches a sizeable number. Secondly, the scale of the model also matters, depending on the how much one is willing to spend, so to start with 1:43 is a decent scale for a car collection and 1:18 for a motorcycle collection.

Lastly, Diecast scale model collection isn't about collecting anything and everything that one can, in the race to increase the size of the collection, but rather about collecting models for their uniqueness or importance and the detailing of the models.

Where do you see the Diecast collecting scene going in India?

Well, Diecast collection is one hobby, which most of the population in India is unaware of, as there is limited access to the scale models for collectors in India. However, with the help of model collector forums on the social media, the current scene seems to be growing slowly.

VIVEK GOEL COMIC BOOK COLLECTOR

DAYJOB: COMIC BOOK ARTIST AND CEO - HOLY COW ENTERTAINMENT.

What made you start your collection?

I have been an avid comic book reader since my childhood. I just could not understand novels and was completely uninterested in books without pictures (including school textbooks :). I always wanted my favorite comic books to be with me 24/7 and thus started my comic book collection.

How can someone, today, start building a collection like yours?

One has to understand what he likes and it completely depends on individuals. Again the concept of possession and how much do you wanna possess and what lengths you are going to go to achieve that matters a lot. Venues of procuring your fav. books are a lot, all you need is the will and a lot of cash.

To me it does not matters how many comic books you possess, what truly matters is that you have what you want because at the end of the day THAT is truly what matters.

Where do you see the comic collecting scene going in India?

There are hardly 40-50 people in India who collect comics seriously and the industry is so small almost all of us know each other. This concept of comics always getting tagged to kids discourage people to collect them. Folks in their lives fail to understand that this is a very intriguing and intelligent medium and it keeps the readers mind fresh and his pocket empty, with no money left for nefarious activities, and always discourage them from even reading comics let alone collecting them - saying you must leave these as you are not a kid now. Budding collectors are even forced to sell their collections to raddiwallas. Even my collection was sold by my dear mom to a raddiwalla when I was in 7th standard. Its later when I grew up I started building my comic book collection seriously when I was 25. It is a serious problem in India.
