L-shaped battery

While all the features were being bombarded with adjectives, Apple forgot to mention some actual innovation. The iPhone Xs has an L-shaped battery while the Xs Max continues the dual-battery configuration from the X. It enables them to take advantage of any kind of space they get inside.

IP68 rating

Although Apple has officially stated that both the phones are IP68 rated, there aren't any visible upgrades from the X for waterproofing. This probably means that the iPhone X might have been eligible for the IP68 certification rather than IP67.

Mind the cracks

Just like the iPhone 8 and X, damage to the glass panel is going to be painful for repairs and we don't mean to your wallet alone. Since the glass back is tightly glued down to the frame, any kind of crack will result in the replacement of the entire chassis.
