WHAT'S NEW

New York Comic Con 2018

While Marvel Studios didn't conduct any presentations or reveals this time, the comic convention wasn't short of announcements for comic book nerds. As we near the release of Aquaman, Warner Bros. dropped an extended look of the upcoming movie starring Jason Momoa and Amber Heard. This was the same video clip that was shown to attendees at San Diego Comic Con this year and now it was released online. It shows a bigger scale of the war and a better look at Black Manta. Also, we finally got to see Aquaman's comic book suit that has been done to extreme detail. Spider-man: Into the Spidey-verse got its second trailer detailing other characters from the Spider-family. After an impressive first season, American Gods released a first look into its second season. Another TV show coming from Neil Gaiman, Good Omens was revealed through a trailer at the convention. Apart from these, we got to see new trailers for The Flash season 5, Daredevil season 3, Harley Quinn and a longer trailer of DC's Titans.

Untitled Marvel Studios Film removed from 2020 release

Marvel Studios has removed an untitled movie from its 2020 release date. Originally planned for a July 31, 2020 release, the movie that got removed is still unknown. In the phase four of the MCU, there are several movies that are already planned. Out of the lot, the only movie with a dicey future is Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 3. After cutting ties with James Gunn, Disney hasn't found a replacement director for the movie. While the filming of the movie was already moved, it only makes sense to not stick to the original release date. Marvel Studios is currently focusing on phase three and there haven't been any official announcements about phase four apart from Spider-man: Far From Home that comes out after Avengers 4.
